REVIEWED OCTOBER 6, 2026

UBA announced additional benefits for Ruby-account customers and identified participating merchants. Nathan's appears in that list, giving Part 7 a dated commercial reference published by the bank itself. [5] [Documented]

WHY THE RECORD MATTERS

A dated institutional notice gives readers a commercial reference to examine alongside the biographical accounts. Its value rests on the specific announcement the bank made.

What the notice establishes

The page records the bank’s inclusion of the brand in a customer-benefit offer at the stated date. It does not identify Agbaso personally or establish ownership, revenue, service quality, the arrangement’s duration or present participation. The general discount ceiling is not a Nathan’s-specific rate.

How the citation was checked

The review uses the publisher, displayed author and date at the top of the page, together with the merchant paragraph in the main article. Reader comments, advertisements and unrelated page links are outside the evidence relied upon.

Terms and duration would require the relevant merchant agreement or schedule. Corporate and transaction records would answer the separate ownership question.
